We believe that essential long term customer and supplier relationships build and sustain themselves on trust.

My dream never went away; it got bigger and bigger,” he says. “I don’t know where it came from. Maybe the reason is that I always wanted to build relationships and friendships, and to help society. I thought that if I worked for someone else, I wouldn’t really be able to make a difference.”

believes in building long-term supply chain partnerships. “I have absolutely made this a cornerstone that a brand that does not have a supply chain relationship at the foundation of its growth is never going to succeed. That has been the principle,” he shares. He goes on to say, “So we’ve been thinking about how we can increase our level of talent and transform the way the next generation sees a career in this industry. We take training and education very seriously.” “Transparency and ethics are part of our core values,” he says. “It is in our culture and practice to engage in partnerships with businesses who share a similar value stream. We are also very focused on sustainability, with ethical sourcing, eco-friendly raw materials, and we follow a responsible supply chain.”

COVID-19 has brought about a lot of self-awareness. As a business, our leadership style and business model has proven to be agile and responsive to withstand many supply chain challenges during the testing times. More businesses have accepted the need of technology, and digitisation, which is a good start, but it’s a long journey. People are starting to realise that it is all about investing for the future. So the mindset is changing, which is positive.”
